Medical Tribune was launched in 1968 as Japan's first weekly newspaper in the field of international medicine. Since then, the company has been providing timely reporting of medical news from Japan and overseas based on a fundamental editorial philosophy of "Swift and Accurate." The newspaper is highly regarded among physicians as a valuable source of information on the remarkable advances being made in medicine and medical treatment. With a circulation of 112,000, it has been certified by the Japan Audit Bureau of Circulations as Japan's largest.

The MTpro Internet service has also been launched on a trial basis. Preparations are under way for a full-scale launch as a unique "search media for specialized information" that provides only required information taken from a variety of content.
